and dynamic content generation. Participants were introduced to JSP for creating dynamic web pages and integrating Java code within HTML templates.

Practical exercises were assigned to participants, where they implemented servlets and JSP pages to build a basic web application with user registration and login functionalities.

Day 2: The second day, June 7th, focused on advanced topics such as database connectivity using JDBC (Java Database Connectivity) and server-side validation. The instructor explained the importance of database interactions in web applications and demonstrated how to perform CRUD (Create, Read, Update, Delete) operations using Java with a relational database.

Participants engaged in further hands-on activities, where they developed an enhanced version of their previous web application by incorporating database connectivity and server-side form validation.

The session was well appreciated by the students and they also demanded more such sessions.

Outcome:

- ✓ Proficiency in Advanced Java Concepts: Participants gained a strong understanding of Advanced Java concepts, including Java Servlets, JSP, JDBC, and server-side validation. They acquired the skills needed to build dynamic and interactive web applications and integrate them with databases.
- ✓ Practical Application: Through live coding demonstrations and hands-on exercises, participants developed practical experience in using Advanced Java to create functional web applications. They gained confidence in building real-world projects with Java technologies, preparing them for future software development challenges.
